MARKET UPDATE

Market Overview (September 2026)

September proved to be another difficult month for Philippine fixed income, as inflation made an unwelcome return to its April peak. Headline inflation snapped a four-month slowdown, surging back to 7.2% in September — matching the highest reading since March 2023 — driven by a confluence of bad weather pushing up food prices, elevated fuel costs, and a sharply weaker peso. Core inflation also accelerated to 4.7% from 4.1% in August, signaling a broadening of price pressures beyond food and energy. The year-to-date average rose to 5.4%, well above the government's 2–4% target band. Government securities yields rose across all tenors, with the 10-year Treasury bond yield climbing to 7.71% by month-end — the highest since 2018 — as investors sold bonds ahead of the October policy review. The peso weakened further, nearing ₱62.86 against the dollar, adding to imported inflation pressures. Amid the volatility, the Bureau of the Treasury launched RTB 32 — a 2.5-year retail bond — ultimately raising ₱167.25 billion, comfortably exceeding its ₱150 billion target at a coupon of 6.875%, reflecting robust retail investor demand for higher-yielding government paper.

Outlook (October 2026)

The BSP is widely expected to deliver one final 25-basis-point rate hike at its October 22 meeting, bringing the policy rate to 5.25%. The September inflation reacceleration — driven largely by El Niño-related food supply disruptions and peso weakness — significantly reduces any remaining case for a pause. Market participants broadly agree that the BSP should remain focused on anchoring inflation expectations rather than reacting to short-term peso movements, given that much of the currency's weakness reflects elevated US Treasury yields and broad dollar strength rather than domestic fundamentals. Should the October hike proceed as expected and mark the peak of the tightening cycle, bonds could begin to find a floor. We maintain our defensive short-duration posture but are watching the October 22 meeting closely for any signals of a pivot — any dovish tilt from the BSP, combined with evidence that El Niño food price pressures are proving transient, would be the catalyst to begin selectively extending duration.
